THE CALL TO COME HOME

'Twas the midnight hour,
And the woods were still;
The mosses were dreaming
As mosses will,
While the great hills watched
As the great hills do,
The constant change
From the old to the new.

The winding paths
Of the old town woke.
But the pasture bars
Were the first that spoke.
They called for the children
Of long ago,
Who use to come
In the sunset glow.
And this was the word
The listening stars heard.

“By the pasture path
The strawberries are red;
The birds have their nests
In the trees overhead,

The woodchuck has burrowed
Just over the wall—
But where are the children
That used to call
Co' boss! Co' boss!
Then let down the bar
And drive the cows home
By the first evening star?"

A breeze from the hill
Swept down to the plain,
It heard the lament
And took up the refrain,—
"Come home, come home!
We are waiting all."
And the oaks and the pines
Breathed out the same call,—
"Come home, O, come home!"

When the old town woke
It was all in the air;
The call was echoing
Everywhere.
From Gumpas Height
And Gage Hill too,
From the southern line
To the north it flew,
And every voice joined
In this chorus sweet,—

“Come home, come home
And your old friends greet!
From the north and the south,
From the east and the west,
Come home, come home,
Any way that is best,
Hurry home! Hurry home!
For the table is spread,
We’ve gathered the berries
And baked the brown bread,
And we’ll have of all things
Such a goodly array
As you never have seen
Since your grandmother’s day.
Then come home! O, come home!

Forget, forget
That the years have been,
Come home to the fields
And be children again.
The sun will be gold,
The sky deepest blue.
And the old town eager
To welcome you.”

STORE REMODELED AND UP-TO-DATE.

Dickson's tea store has an interesting history. It was founded in 1876, Centennial year, and was known as the Centennial American tea store. The location was in Bascom building in Merrimack street. In 1883, removal was made to the Wyman's exchange building, the present location. David Dickson in that year had charge, and in the following year, together with his brother, Thomas Dickson, a partnership was formed and the company name changed to that of Dickson Bros. In 1901 the partnership was dissolved and David Dickson continued the business.

The steaming tea pot has been a familiar sign on the street since 1884, when it was first erected. Just as soon as the stagings are taken down it will be replaced in its old position once more.

The Dickson tea store is the largest and best equipped tea and coffee house in New England. The equipment for the conduct of the business is modern and the latest appliances is installed. The coffee roaster has a capacity of 300 pounds of coffee per hour. There is also a pulverizer, a grinder and granulator.

Mr. Dickson imports his own teas. His famous D. D. brands being known all over the country.

First Congregational Church.

The land for the site of the present church was given to the First Congregational Society February 9, 1842, by General Samuel M. Richardson. At a meeting held February 24, it was voted to begin the erection of the house as soon as possible, and David Cutter, Moody Hobbs, Joshua Atwood, David Butler and Amos Batchelder were chosen a building committee. The house was completed in the autumn of the same year and at a meeting held October 17, Jeremiah Tyler, Enoch Marsh and John M. Tyler were chosen a committee of arrangements for its dedication. The Fathers have passed away but the building, with its many tender associations, still stands.

Rev. Augustus Berry.

Rev. Augustus Berry was born in Concord, 1824. He was educated at Francestown Academy, Amherst College, and Andover Seminary. For five years he was principal of Appleton Academy at Mount Vernon, N. H. He was always a very popular and successful teacher. He left teaching to enter the ministry, but during his whole life continued intensely interested in all lines of educational work. He was settled over the church in Pelham, N. H., in October, 1861, and continued pastor of this church until his sudden death in October, 1899.

During his long life Mr. Berry was a close student, not only of books, but of all the ongoings of the world; and, although his life was lived and his work done in the retirement of a small country town, he kept in opinion and in thought fully abreast of the world's foremost workers and thinkers.

HISTORY OF PELHAM, N. H.

The territory now comprising the town of Pelham was originally parts of Dunstable, Dracut and Londonderry. That portion west of the line running from the west shore of Long Pond to the mouth of Kimble's Brook, up Beaver Brook to Londonderry Corner, just above the place where I. C. Marshall now lives, was included in the old township of Dunstable. The northern part of the town was also claimed by Londonderry. The part east of the line mentioned was included in the town of Dracut, and was known as Dracut District.

For many years the Provinces of New Hampshire and Massachusetts both claimed jurisdiction over this territory. The dispute was finally settled in 1741 by the King's Surveyor, who established the State Line, called "Mitchel's Curve Line."

The title to the land itself was a matter of great dispute. The Masonian Proprietors claimed it under a grant to Capt. John Mason from the King of England; it was also claimed under the "Wheelwright Purchase," made directly from the Indians by Rev. John Wheelwright of Exeter, a deed of which is on record in Rockingham County, for Pelham was a portion of that county until the year 1822. Massachusetts Colony had granted much of the Dunstable portion to various parties; one grant to Gov. John Endicott, including Jeremy Hill and the Butler Farm; one to Mr. Kimble, including the Mansfield, Muldoon and Richardson farms; one to Mr. Coburn, between Gumpas and Long Ponds. These "farms" were wild lands and were held for speculation.

In 1719, a block house was built on or near the spot where the house of Mrs. F. A. Cutter now stands, by the Masonian Proprietors and the Londonderry settlers, and was used by them as a stopping-place on the way from Londonderry to Boston. This was the first house ever erected in the town of Pelham.

In 1721, the first permanent settlement by John Butler and Joseph Hamblett, in the vicinity of Gumpas Pond, on the "John Gage Place." Butler and Hamblett bought separate tracts of land, and for company as well as economy, concluded to erect but one house, which they built on the line of their respective tracts of land. Here they kept "Bachelor's Hall," but after awhile, each thinking he was doing more than his share of the housework, and contributing more to the general welfare of the colony than the other, they concluded to divide the house and live as two separate

Mr. Gage, one of our most respected citizens, who lives on Gage Hill, first settled by the Gages, is a direct descendant of the original settler of that name.

He was born on the farm on which he now lives, and is one of the most successful of our farmers and business men. He has held offices of trust in town affairs and represented the town in the Legislature of 1905.

His youth was passed on the farm until the opening of the Civil war, and in 1862 he enlisted in the 13th Regt., N. H. Vol's. On his return from the army he worked for some years at the shoe business, but the care of his aged parent called him back to the old home.

Mr. Gage has made many improvements and now has one of the most productive farms in town.

families, which they did by building a wall from the center of the door to the center of the stone fire-place, and thus each had a tenement in the first home in Pelham.

In the same year, (1721), and probably soon after Butler and Hamblett, Richardson, Jacques and Wyman, who like Butler and Hamblett, came from Woburn, Mass., settled in town, as well as the Gages from Bradford. One Gage settled on Gage Hill, one near the Center, William Richardson on the Whitehouse farm, Jacques on D. M. Gould's farm and the Wymans near the Center.

Settlement progressed very slowly for many years. There were various obstacles to settlement, chief among which was the doubtful ownership of the territory and the old proverbial saying that "all Dracut District was good for was to pasture the Devil and blue-jays on."

In spite of the proverbial sterility of the soil, the settlement increased, and on the establishment of the Province line, which left Dracut District outside of its old town, Nottingham West (a part of old Dunstable) and Londonderry both claimed and taxed some of the settlers. For this reason Joseph Butler and others petitioned for a new town, giving as the reason that they were rated in two towns for the support of the Gospel; no other taxes were mentioned. This petition was granted, and on July 5, 1746, Pelham became a town.

are located in the northerly part of the town, and have always filled a noteworthy place in its history. They were first built by Lieut. Joseph Butler, fifth son of Dea. John Butler, one of the first settlers of the town, and have always been owned and run by his decendants until the year 1908, when they were sold to Merrill Atwood and his son Edwin, both of Pelham. Twice within the last sixty years the mills were destroyed by fire. The last Butler to live there and manage the mills was the late Wm. G. Butler, of the seventh generation, and always a prominent citizen of the town.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

.. At a General town-meeting of the freeholders and other Inhabitants of the town of Pelham Regularly assembled July ye 21, 1746; The town then Proceeded to chuse town Officers as follows: viz . Capt. Henry Baldwin. Moderator; Eleazar Whiting. Town Clerk. &c ; Selectmen. Joseph Hamlet, Henry Baldwin. William Richardson, Josiah Gage and Eleazar Whiting; Town Treasurer, Henry Baldwin, jur.; Constable, Thomas Wyman; Surveyors of Highways, viz., Jacob Butler, John Baldwin, Daniel Gage and Simond Beard; Tythingmen, viz., Henry Richardson and Amos Gage; Fence-viewers and field-Drivers, viz., William Elliot and Hugh Richardson; Sealer of Weights and Measures, viz., Henry Richardson; Surver of timber. &c., viz., Amos Gage, Hog-reafs. viz., Simon Beard and David Jones."

At the next town meeting, in October, 1746, it was voted to hire as much preaching for the coming winter as 60 pounds, old tenor, would procure; a pound, old tenor, was about forty-two cents. In 1751, Mr. James Hobbs of Hampton, N. H., was called as the settled minister, with a settlement of 700 pounds, or about $298.; and a yearly salary of 400 pounds, or about $168.; he was also to be furnished twenty-five cords of firewood when he had a family and kept house. The minister's salary was paid in beef, pork, corn, rye, etc., and the value was fixed in town meeting.

The Ordination was a great affair, and was attended by the people of all the towns in the vicinity. It was an occasion of feasting and good cheer. The town paid for the rum and other articles furnished for the Ordination and the Council of Ministers.

The first church was built on the Common lot, some 30 rods south of the present common. In 1786 a church was built on the common which was given to the town for that purpose by Mr. Ferguson. This one was used until the present church was built in 1842. In 1859 it was repaired and converted into a Town Hall, agreeably to a bequest from Gen. S. M. Richardson, and was used for Town purposes until its destruction by fire in November, 1906.

Gumpas Pond, Island Pond and White's Pond are entirely within the town of Pelham, together with a portion of Long Pond. The derivations of some familiar geographical names are interesting. Jeremy Hill was named for an Indian of that name who lived on or near it, Gumpas Pond, Brook and Hill for an Indian called Gumpas, Beaver Brook for the beavers that were very plentiful there, and Golden's Brook for an Indian, Peter Golden, who was drowned in it when he was very full of fire-water. In early times, Golden's Brook was famous for its alewives, and the settlers used to carry them away by the cart-load to fertilize their corn.

The first saw mill in town was on Golden's Brook, near the bridge east of where Joseph Richardson now lives. This mill was carried away by a freshet; the remains of the old dam can still be seen there. Joseph Butler built a mill soon after on Beaver Brook at what is known as "Butler's Mills", which has been continuously in the family until the Butler Milling Company sold to Mr. Atwood about two years ago. One of the Gages had a Grist Mill on Robbins' Brook, near the Griffin place, Hamblett a mill at the outlet of Gumpas Pond, and a Company, partly of Pelham and partly of Windham men, built a mill at what has since been "Simpson's Mills," just over the Windham line on Golden's Brook. A woolen mill was built at Butler's Mills, and another just above Mr. I. C. Marshall's; these mills were destroyed by fire. Coburn's Saw Mill on the Lyon Brook and Butler's Mill on Broad Meadow Brook have been abandoned, as well as the mill at the outlet of Gumpas Pond. Seavey's Mill, now Colman's Mill, and Hillman's Mill on Gumpas Brook, were erected later and are still occupied.

About 1820 a small meeting house was built on Gage Hill, and was afterward made into a dwelling house, where Rev. Tobias Foss formally lived. A larger meeting house was built in 1844, and occupied for many years but was afterward taken down.

The oldest house in town is probably the one in which Mr. Landry now lives, near the residence of Mr. W. E. Pearson. This was built by Lieut. Thomas Gage, who was one of those lost abroad in the French and Indian War. His widow later enlarged the house, bringing the nails and hardware from Boston on horseback. Her son perished in a snow storm while coming from the grist mill at Collinsville, when within a few rods of home.

The old Moody Hobbs house was built soon after and was known for many years as "Merrill's Tavern". The old parsonage was built by Rev. James Hobbs in 1751 or 1752.

The town grew rapidly and became one of the most important towns of the section. The old muster field where the car barn now stands was used for the spring training and the fall muster of the regiment, and its three or four taverns, lines of stages, election day festivities, horse races, and athletic contests made it a noted gathering place for the region around.

On the building of the railroads, Pelham was left in an isolated situation, and for many years was without any public communication with the outside world except a tri-weekly mail, but now, with the Electric railway with a half-hourly service connecting with four large cities, Rural mail delivery, Public Library, etc., the people living within its limits are content with their lot, and gladly welcome their friends from abroad to share with them the pleasures of a day or of a longer time.

THE "SURPLUS REVENUE" OR "PUBLIC MONEY"

During the administration of President Andrew Jackson, the revenues of the United States being greater than the expenses and there being a large surplus in the United States Bank, this surplus was divided among the States, and by the States apportioned to the towns.

Pelham's share was about $3800, and sufficient of this was used to build the stone bridges over Beaver Brook near Pelham Centre, at a cost of about $1000 each.

THE STONE BRIDGES.

At a town meeting on March 14th, 1837, it was voted to receive the "Public Money," and Capt. Edward Wyman was chosen agent to receive and loan the same. At the same meeting it was voted to build a stone bridge across Beaver Brook with suitable arch or arches, and David Cutter, Esq. and Jonathan Atwood, Jr., were chosen to carry the same into effect.

This was the lower bridge or, as it was formally known, "Abbott's Bridge".

On March 12th, 1839, it was voted to build a stone bridge over Beaver Brook with one or more suitable arches, and Jonathan Atwood Jr., David Cutter Esq., and Joseph B. Gage were chosen a committee to build the same. This was the Middle Bridge or, as it was formally known, "Whiting's Bridge". It was also voted to expend such part of the public money deposited in this town as may be necessary to build said bridge.

On March 11th, 1840, it was voted to build an arched stone bridge across Beaver Brook, and Asa Stickney, Moody Hobbs, and Joshua Atwood were chosen a committee to build the same. Sufficient money to build the same was appropriated from the "surplus revenue." This was the Upper bridge, formally known as "Richardson's Bridge".

All of the "surplus revenue" was not expended on these bridges, for the records show other appropriations of money from that fund: one in 1844 of approximately $350.

PELHAM WAR RECORD.

From the earliest colonial days up to the present time, the men of Pelham have always performed their part as true men and soldiers.

Some of the first settlers of the town were with Lovewell in the famous Indian fight at what is now Fryeburg, Maine. In the long winter march through the wilderness which ended in the capture of Quebec, Pelham men were present. One of them, a boy of sixteen, was left behind with a sick comrade who eventually died, and the boy, after rolling logs over the body of his comrade, followed on after the army, and rejoined the ranks before the city. At the reduction of Louisburg and in other engagements, Pelham was represented by men who were on the firing line. The record is given only of those who died abroad.

In the Revolutionary war, Pelham was represented on almost every battle-field, especially at Bunker Hill, where, under that grim warrior John Stark, they were at the rail fence and gave the British grenadiers their first taste of true Yankee fighting. Again, when Burgoyne with his well provided army marched from Canada to cut the colonies in two, the men of Pelham, at Stark's call, marched to Bennington, and under him broke the power of the British commander. These men were volunteers for the special occasion, for Pelham at that time had its full quota of soldiers in the Continental Army. At Trenton, Brandywine, Monmouth, during the dark winter at Valley Forge, and at the closing scene of the Revolution at Yorktown, Pelham men were in the ranks.

In 1812, although the war was very unpopular in New England, the men of this town rallied to their country's call and bore an honorable part. The Military Company of this town and Salem were under marching orders for the defence of Portsmouth, and their members were not subject to the draft. They were not called out, as the enemy concluded not to make a land attack.

In the Civil war, Pelham was represented in every department. At Hilton Head and Charlestown, in the desperate assaults at Fort Wagner, Fredericksburg, Petersburg, and for almost four long and bloody years, the men of Pelham did their part to preserve the Union. At the closing scenes of Richmond and Appomattox, they saw the fruits of the long struggle for the preservation of the nation.

The flag of the 13th N. H. Vol's., in one company of which twenty-eight Pelham men were enlisted, was the first regimental flag carried into the city of Richmond when the Confederate capitol fell into the hands of the Union troops.

HON. JOHN M. WOODS.

Present Mayor of Somerville, Mass. A successful man of business and an illustrious example of what ability, energy and good nature may accomplish.

On October 22, 1839, John M. Woods, son of George and Elizabeth Ann (Jackman) Woods, was born in Pelham, N. H. He early became intimately acquainted with hard work, and had scant opportunity for attending school. On the day he was twenty-one years old he began his independent career by working in Salem, N. H., at shoemaking. On August 18, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, for three years' service in the Civil War, and from the time he enlisted to June 21, 1865, when he was mustered out, Mr. Woods did his full duty as a soldier.

Because of his unassailable integrity, his sunny temper, backed by a positive character and his keen judgement, Mr Woods has taken a prominent place in the lumber trade. The reputation of the house of John M. Woods & Co. vies with his Army record in holding the place nearest Mr. Woods' heart.

When the Public Library was built, Mr. Woods presented the town with the beautiful hardwood finish for the Memorial Room. In every thing that pertains to the welfare of the city of Somerville, Mr. Woods takes a deep interest. He served as representative in the legislature in 1884. In 1904 he was elected Senator from the third Middlesex district. The unanimous re-nomination for Senator in 1905 and the re-election showed that his year of service had increased the public confidence in him. Among all classes of people he has many friends and no enemies. In business, in the public service, in his hours of rest and recreation, Mr. Woods is always the same jolly, kindly, keen, even-tempered man.

WHY NOT?

Why not invest where you are sure to double your money?
